2013 mayoral race. Some of the candidates swear by their Twitter accounts, but others appear to be staying off of the Internet. Press the flesh. Local political science experts suggest Bostonians prefer their candidates get out and shake hands. Tried and true. Current Mayor Thomas Menino went through a lot of shoe leather in his tenure, meeting about half of all Hub residents. Predicting about 750,000 of the roughly 4 million eligible voters will cast a ballot in the Democratic and Republican primaries for an open U.S. Senate seat, Secretary of State William Galvin said he hopes a last-minute surge of excitement and get-out-the-vote efforts will foster a bigger turnout today. Five candidates are vying to fill the seat vacated in February when John Kerry stepped down to become the U.S. secretary of state.

Must they tweet to be our mayor?

The race for mayor. Experts say candidates should be meeting, not tweeting, voters.

What kind of social media presence does it take to make it to City Hall? / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

The race to replace Mayor Thomas Menino is well underway in Boston—and on Twitter. But in the world of politics, where the number of people on your side is everything, is the amount of your Twitter following as important as the amount of people you shake hands with?

Some political experts say no and cite Boston as the reason. "Boston's kind of different from the rest of the country. It's kind of a small big city and you still have to use a lot of shoe leather to be successful," said Thomas Whalen, a professor of social science at Boston University. "Mayor Tom Menino has proved that."

Despite that, the expansive field of mayoral candidates is growing or creating each of their social media presences. Suffolk District Attorney Dan Conley launched his Twitter profile the first week of April, right around the time he formally announced his bid.

"As a candidate for mayor of Boston, I think it's very conducive to getting my message out, especially to a younger demographic living here in Boston who communicates very quickly and freely with social media," said Conley, who added that he currently sends out all of the tweets himself. He had posted about 57 tweets as of yesterday.

City Councilor John Connolly, who had posted about 750 tweets as of yesterday, said using social media is a "critical" part of his campaign strategy.

Quoted

"I think we are telling people — telling the city — that this is their race, too. This is their future." Ross

"I don't think the importance of face-to-face contact with voters will ever disappear, but this is an added dimension of campaigning that's also essential," he said.

When City Councilor Michael Ross jumped into the race on April 11, he used his Blackberry to announce via Twitter that he was running for mayor. Ross has said that his decision to launch his bid on social media signaled that his campaign would be different than the other candidates'.

"Making this announcement the way we did, we're saying we invite you in," Ross told the Boston Globe. "I think we are telling people — telling the city — that this is their race, too. This is their future."

Expert opinion

Followers doesn't equal votes

While the candidates seem to prefer to have a social media presence rather than not, Northeastern University political science professor William Mayer said that, in Boston, it's more important the candidates organize rather than try to win votes through social media.

"It's a good tool for organizing and for fundraising, but turning it into votes is not going to happen," said Mayer.

Experts say tweeting doesn't guarantee a win. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

"The evidence I've seen does not yet convince me that the Internet and social media are a great tool for persuading people to vote for you." Mayer

Mayer added that while social media is a good outreach tool, that doesn't mean using it well ensures an election victory.

Bombing background.
FBI interviews 'Misha' and suspect's widow

Federal investigators visited the Rhode Island home of Tamerlan Tsarnaev's widow, Katherine Russell, yesterday as part of its ongoing investigation of the Boston Marathon bombings.

Russell, who lived with Tsarnaev and their 3-year-old child in Cambridge, is said to be "doing everything she can to assist with the investigation," her lawyer said.

FBI agents have reportedly also interviewed "Misha," whose real name is Mikhail Allakhverdov.

The Rhode Island resident, 39, has been credited by the suspect's uncle as the influential force behind the dead suspect's radicalism.

"This person just took his brain. He just brainwashed him completely," Ruslan Tsarni told CNN last week.

The New York Review of Books reported that Allakhverdov denied teaching Tsarnaev.

Welfare for brothers subject of state probe

How and why the Boston Marathon bombers received taxpayer-funded welfare money will be the subject of an investigation by state lawmakers.

The House Committee on Post Audit and Oversight held a brief meeting yesterday during which its chairman Rep. David Linsky vowed an investigation into how the Tsarnaev brothers and their family were able to receive funds.

"I will assure the members of the public that this committee will actively review every single piece of information that we can find on this particular inquiry because clearly the public has a right to know what benefits, if any, ... the individuals who are accused of horrific, horrific crimes were receiving," he said.

Fire victim identified.
Boston Univ. student killed in Allston fire

A Boston University student from Brooklyn, N.Y., was killed and two other students were injured when the Allston home they were in erupted in flames Sunday morning, sending at least one person jumping from the roof of a porch to escape the fierce flames.

Binland Lee, 22, was a senior studying marine science and was scheduled to graduate in September, according to BU Today. She graduated from Brooklyn Technical High School in 2009.

In a letter to the school community Sunday night, President Robert Brown called the incident a tragedy.

"Our thoughts and prayers go to the family and friends of the individual who has died and all the victims of the fire," Brown said in his letter, which was posted on the school's website.

A fire department spokesman said Lee was found in the attic. MICHAEL NAUGHTON

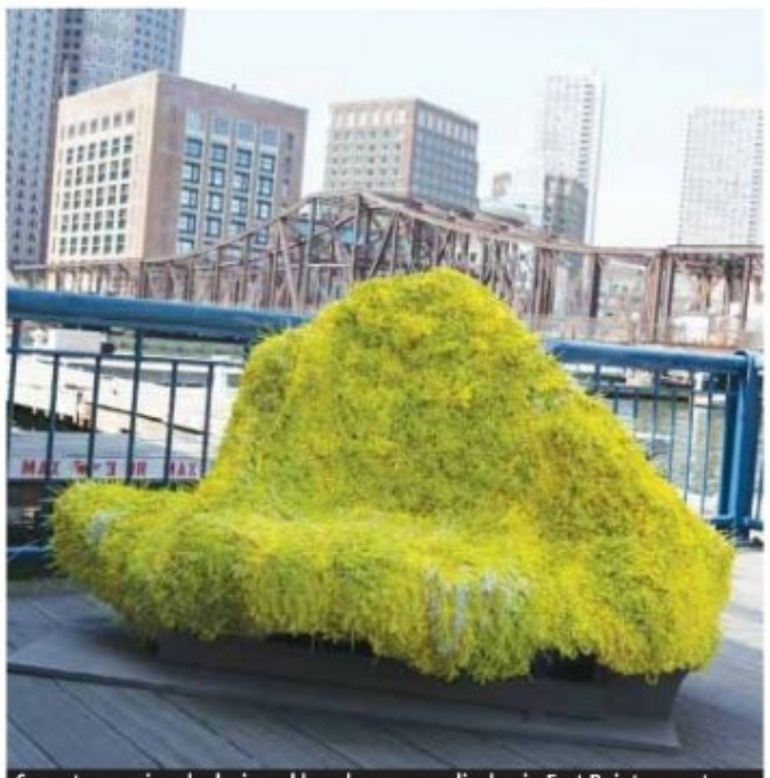
Challenge results in a pretty sweet 'Street Seat'



Seventeen uniquely designed benches are on display in Fort Point as part of the Design Museum Boston's "Street Seat Design Challenge."

Creative benches.
Have you spotted some new and unusual seats along the Fort Point Channel?

Fort Point was speckled with 17 unique seats on Saturday in the hope of intriguing waterfront visitors and inspiring the public to think outside the box — or, in this case, the bench.

The benches are the result of the Design Museum Boston's "Street Seats Design Challenge," which launched in September 2012 and attracted 172 entries from 26 states and 23 countries.

"A city is essentially a museum with exhibitions being out in the public," said Sam Aquillano, co-founder and executive director of Design Museum Boston. "Fort Point Channel itself is a very big focal point in the Innovation District. We really wanted to engage the community and a broad number of designers."

In February, the 17 best designs were selected based on their aesthetic quality, functionality and sustainability. They will remain on display until October. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Winning designs

Runner-up: "LuminUS" was designed by a team from Dyer Brown Architects & Chapman Construction in Boston.
People's Choice: "Chroma" was a team from Make Stuff Lab in Boston.

Poisonous letters. Miss. man in court to answer charges in ricin mailings

A Mississippi martial arts instructor appeared in federal court yesterday to face charges in connection with mailing letters containing the deadly poison ricin to President Barack Obama and other government officials.

Everett Dutschke, 41, was arrested Saturday in Tupelo, Miss., after authorities searched his former business and home. He is charged with developing and possessing ricin and attempting to use it as a weapon.

The judge ordered a preliminary hearing be held Thursday, when prosecutors will present more detailed evidence in the case. REUTERS

Google Now comes to iPhone, challenging Apple Inc.'s Siri

Now. The technology taps into Google's various online services.

PERSONAL ASSISTANT TECHNOLOGY SUCH AS APPLE'S SIRI, GOOGLE NOW AND PRODUCTS CREATED BY VARIOUS START-UP COMPANIES ASPIRE TO PLAY WHAT COULD BECOME A CRITICAL FUNCTION OF SMARTPHONES. / GOOGLE

Google Inc. is bringing its Google Now technology to the iPhone, where it will compete head-on with Apple Inc.'s Siri to serve as the primary service that smartphone users rely on to get everything from weather updates to traffic forecasts.

Google Now, which made its debut last year on mobile devices powered by the search giant's Android operating system, will be available as a feature in the new version of the Google Search app for iPhones and iPads.

Personal assistant technology such as Apple's Siri, Google Now and products created by various start-up companies aspire to play what could become a critical function of smartphones by helping users with daily chores, such as looking up information on the Internet, handling calendar appointments and managing travel plans.

Some analysts believe Apple's Siri, which comes preloaded on iPhones and iPads, represents a growing threat to Google, the world's No. 1 search engine. The information that Siri provides on common topics such as sports scores and nearby restaurants reduces the need to visit Google's search engine, the analysts say.

Johanna Wright, Google's vice president of Search and Assist for Mobile, described Google Now as the next phase in the evolution of search, in which answers are served up without a user needing to type in a query. REUTERS

Opportunity 'Knox' but memoir could be risk for Amanda

Her story. Sex, drugs and murder — $4M 'Foxy Knoxy' book has legal and moral problems.

If Knox performs well on her TV interview with ABC's Diane Sawyer, it could dramatically improve her prospects. / GETTY IMAGES

Lesbian trysts and suicide, police corruption and murder — it's easy to see why publisher HarperCollins paid $4 million for Amanda Knox's memoir of the murder case of the century. "Waiting to be Heard" is released today, along with Knox's first TV interview, five and a half years after the murder of British student Meredith Kercher for which she was convicted, and then acquitted.

But the plans have been rocked by a pending retrial for her and her alleged accomplice, ex-boyfriend Raffaele Sollecito, after the Italian Supreme Court overturned their acquittal. The memoir's U.K. release has been delayed over fears that Knox could be sued for defaming investigators.

"There are so many questions now and they don't work in her favor," crisis management PR specialist Glenn Selig told Metro. "The publishers thought they had a done deal: The case was over and she was wrongfully accused. Had they known it would shift, I suspect they would not have made the deal."

Although HarperCollins denies having any legal problems with the book, it may provide ammunition for prosecutors. "Possibly we can find a new element for the trial from the book," Kercher family lawyer Francesco Maresca told Metro, adding that he would read it in preparation for the case.

Florida teen's shooter faces deadline in court

Prosecutors in Florida want George Zimmerman to state publicly at a court hearing today whether he will pursue his immunity defense in the 2012 shooting death of teenager Trayvon Martin on the basis of the state's "Stand Your Ground" law, or waive his right to use it.

Prosecutors asked Judge Debra Nelson in a motion to remind Zimmerman "that should defendant in fact wish to waive any pretrial immunity challenge under this statute, he may not attempt to do so later, particularly once trial has commenced."

Zimmerman will attend today's hearing, according to his lawyer, Mark O'Mara. However, O'Mara told Reuters he hadn't decided what he will do if the judge tries to question his client. REUTERS

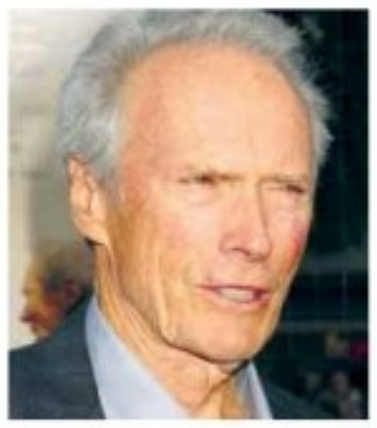
Is Coachella-loving Clint Eastwood headed for divorce?



Clint Eastwood's latest fashion choice hasn't helped to quell rumors that he and wife Dina are on the outs. The 82-year-old actor and director has been spotted around Los Angeles recently without his wedding ring, according to Radar Online. He also went ringless when he took 16-year-old daughter Morgan to the Coachella music festival two weeks ago. The couple haven't been photographed together since November 2011, and Dina has reportedly checked herself into a treatment facility because of depression and anxiety brought on by their marital troubles.

I think the most interesting part of this gossip item is the fact that Eastwood went to Coachella with his 16-year-old daughter. Was he huffing nitrous oxide in a headdress or what?

Depp out and about with new gal pal Amber Heard

It looks like Johnny Depp and his "Rum Diary" co-star Amber Heard are back on, as the rumored couple were spotted hand-in-hand at the Rolling Stones' surprise concert at a small Los Angeles club over the weekend, according to E! News. Depp and Heard were rumored to be dating shortly after Depp's split with his girlfriend of 14 years, Vanessa Paradis, though reps for both parties have refused to comment on the relationship.

Cyrus on her privacy

I know, I know: I do not want to run another item about Miley Cyrus and Liam Hemsworth's engagement because she's 20 — of course they aren't going to end up together forever, so it's so stupid to even speculate. But it's a slow news day, so here goes: In a new issue of Elle UK, the singer says being engaged to Liam Hemsworth feels like the most natural thing in the world — but she wants to keep it to herself, according to the magazine. "We have a house together and dogs," she tells the magazine. "It just seems right to be wearing this ring and to be committed. But we keep our relationship low-key and don't talk about it anymore."

Not talking about things as much seems to be a new guiding principle for Cyrus, who has scaled back on the personal nature of her Twitter output. "We were too nice to the world and gave them too much insight — into my life and my puppies and my house — and I just don't feel like they get that privilege anymore," she says. "Like on my Twitter, I'm much more ... not conservative, but you don't see a picture of my dogs. You don't get that personal stuff anymore."

See ya, Mariah! J.Lo to return to 'Idol' — maybe

It turns out that it was Jennifer Lopez herself who initiated the talks last week for her to possible return to "American Idol," replacing her replacement, Mariah Carey, according to Radar Online. "J.Lo had her manager, Benny Medina, approach Fox to alert them of her interest in rejoining 'Idol,'" a source says. "[Her] twins will enter kindergarten in the fall, and stability is important for them — and J.Lo — at this time. She's looking for possible schools for the kids in Los Angeles at the moment." But the source is quick to point out that it was never Lopez's idea that she be swapped in for Carey this season as a fix for flagging ratings — a plan that was reportedly pursued and then scuttled when Carey's camp threatened legal action. Lopez was only looking to return next year. "If there was a 'secret plot' to replace Mariah, as has been suggested, then it was all Fox," the source says. "J.Lo's approach was about the future, not the present. She's talking about next season." Carey's contract only covers one season of the reality competition.

PROJECT BREAD'S

WALK FOR HUNGER

MAY 5, 2013

www.projectbread.org/walk

This is OUR Boston

Over the past week, we've watched a community come together. Friend to friend, neighbor to neighbor, and even stranger to stranger, we've stood together and helped one another through an unimaginably difficult time.

This is the heart of community at work—a force powerful enough to sustain all of us in the face of an evil that none of us could ever have imagined.

That same generosity of heart is at the core of Project Bread's Walk for Hunger. For over 45 years, the first Sunday in May has brought tens of thousands of families, friends, and colleagues together to walk and raise money for the 750,000 people in our Commonwealth who struggle to keep food on the table. For those who face hunger, it is the single most important day of the year.

WE NEED YOUR HELP

This year, Project Bread faces a unique and unprecedented challenge. On Sunday, May 5, 2013, The Walk for Hunger will be the first large outdoor public gathering in the city since the tragic events at the Boston Marathon. We need your help to encourage people to come out, to walk together, and to help us raise the funds that will allow Project Bread to fulfill its commitment to providing people of all ages, cultures, and walks of life with sustainable, reliable access to nutritious food.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP RIGHT NOW?

- Join the Walk, and bring your family and friends. Let everyone know you are walking and encourage them to join you on May 5th.
- Share information about the Walk throughout your workplace through newsletters, e-mails, and social media. Get the word out!
- Post information about the Walk on your social networks like Twitter and Facebook—and encourage others to re-share your posts.
- If you can't be with us on May 5th, join our virtual Walk for Hunger: it's a simple way to raise funds and make a difference in our community, no matter where you are.

The Walk for Hunger has always represented the best of Boston. This year, please help us show the world that the events of the past week have not changed who we are: a strong community that bands together to help friends and neighbors in need. Together, we can break the cycle of hunger in our community and transform the lives of individuals and families across the state.

Head to www.projectbread.org to find everything you need to start your Walk now. We've never needed you more.

Brian Stelter on the AM talk-show wars

Books. The author discusses "The Ann Curry Disaster.'"

Brian Stelter, author of "Top of the Morning: Inside the Cutthroat World of Morning TV," refers to the ouster of Ann Curry on the "Today" show as "The Ann Curry Disaster."

After an awkward first year, Curry was unceremoniously replaced as co-host of "Today" in 2012. It wasn't a smooth transfer: Curry actually cried when she announced she was leaving; she then visibly flinched when Matt Lauer tried to comfort her. The watching world cringed and her loyal audience left in droves, knocking "Today" off its throne as the No. 1 morning program, a title it had held for 15 years.

This was a delicious twist for Stelter, a New York Times reporter who was already working on the book. "The Ann Curry Disaster happened in June 2012," he says. "At that point I had already been deep inside the show for about six months."

Stelter wrote fast to make sure the topic was still fresh. NBC has since been clobbered again by "Top of the Morning," which paints its executives as bullies who dubbed Curry's removal "Operation Bambi." "I don't think it's a coincidence that Matt Lauer came out in March and gave interviews and talked about The Ann Curry Disaster for the first time. I think it makes a lot of sense that he was trying to give a pre-rebuttal to my book," says Stelter.

But don't cry for "Today." Stelter thinks such upheaval just might be a good thing.

"I think it's inevitable that the 'Today' show will get back to first place. It's just a question of when," he says. "'GMA' was losing for 15 years; now it's winning, so they're not going to let that go without a fight. And what we see every day is now that fight — which is very interesting to watch."

CHRIS FARAONE

Boston reporter quickly turns around an e-book on the Boston Marathon bombings.

'HEARTBREAK HELL' AND BACK

In times of disaster, there are those who run. And then there are those who run directly into the fray. Journalist Chris Faraone is one of the latter. The former reporter for Boston Phoenix, the now defunct alt-weekly, is an immersive journalist, the kind who doesn't mind getting a little dirt on his hands while hunting for the facts other journalists might leave un-dug.

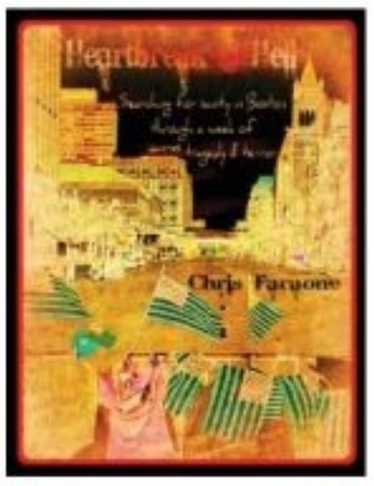
Faraone has camped in the trenches of the Occupy movement, reporting from hotspots in Dewey Square and camps across the country. These months spent exhaustively reporting the grassroots protests for the Phoenix birthed the 34-year-old writer's first book, the self-published "99 Nights with the 99 Percent."

Now, just two weeks after the bombs exploded at the Boston Marathon, he's penned his second. "Heartbreak Hell" chronicles Faraone's experiences reporting the attack over many sleepless hours, fueled — by his own admission — by a lot of drugs and a lot of heart.

Faraone recently won Boston-based online news site BostInno's Write to Power Books award in the media category of their 50 on Fire awards. The awards honor those "setting the Boston scene on fire," the wording now imbued with a kind of eerie symmetry considering the content of "Heartbreak Hell." We caught up with Faraone to talk about his new e-book, available on a free website that went live yesterday.

How the hell did you manage to write an entire book, in two weeks, while juggling freelance assignments?
Some of those assignments were incorporated into the book, but they only account for a bit of it. Otherwise, this is a work of gut reaction and reporting. I was just a few blocks away when the bombs went off. From that point on, I was reporting and writing for about 20 hours a day — whether on Twitter, walking the streets filling notepads or sitting at bars processing it all the best I could.

What was your initial gut reaction when you first became aware what was going on that day?
First, my reaction was that there was no way this was an attack. I thought it must have been some sort of accident. And then, amidst the people who were still going about their business merrily, I saw more and more people crying and even sobbing uncontrollably, lost. Having been in New York City on 9/11, my thought was that I really can't believe something like that is happening again. Then I thought to start reporting.



What has this experience over these last few weeks been like?
I'm from New York, and one thing I love about Boston is that it's not the focus of attention. It's been interesting to watch the reaction from outsiders, because from their perspective it's hard to see that there were different reactions, that not everyone was just holding up "Boston Strong" banners and acting like we won the World Series. As a reporter, I set out to show the different types of impacts that this heinous act of violence had on people and circumstances that we didn't see much of in most reporting in the immediate aftermath.

Did you pitch this book around, or immediately decide to put it online?
Maybe one day some version of "Heartbreak Hell" will come out as a regular print book. At this point, though, that's the last thing on my mind. I just want to get the story out there to as many people as possible. Whether it's cathartic, or just a different take on things, the stories I tell are the kinds that I think people will want to remember down the line. The book is kind of a time capsule.

ALEXANDRA CAVALLO

Q&A

Why did you decide to package this as a free online book?
I think it matched the spirit of the whole reaction. The last thing I want to do is run around hocking a book about this tragedy. These are just stories that I want to get out there. I got help from Clarence Smith Jr. [of Bold Edition] to develop what I can honestly say is one of the most dynamic, beautiful-looking e-books ever released. There's a version on Amazon for Kindle, but it's not as cool-looking as the free version!

San Fran's classic eateries

San Francisco has no shortage of trendy new restaurants, but there are some classic spots well worth seeking out, too. You'll find locals here, dining out on iconic dishes that have been satiating San Franciscans for ages.

AMY SHERMAN FOR FODOR'S

1 Original Joe's

At Original Joe's, banquettes, booths and tuxedoed waiters live on, as do comfort food favorites like eggplant parmigiana, grilled calf liver with bacon and onions, and sautéed sweetbreads. House specialties are all served with a choice of spaghetti, ravioli, french fries, or vegetables, so there's little chance you'll leave hungry.

2 Tommy's Joynt

Singer Tommy Harris opened Tommy's Joynt in 1947, and it's been a friendly, casual place with a whole lot of character ever since. One of just a few surviving "hofbraus," or cafeteria-style beer halls that serve inexpensive food, you'll find all manner of ephemera, animal heads and vintage advertising signs inside. Outside, wildly colorful murals extol the virtues of carved sandwiches, buffalo stew and more than 100 beers. A great place to mingle with regulars while watching the game.

3 Tadich Grill

One of the oldest restaurants in the nation, Tadich Grill opened as a coffee stand during the gold rush in 1849. The menu hasn't changed that much over the years. Nor has the service, a major draw. Looking dapper in white coats and ties, the waiters are true pros: efficient yet entertaining. Classic dishes include Hangtown fry, a kind of omelet with bacon and oysters popular with gold miners; a seafood stew with Italian and Portuguese roots called cioppino; and pan-fried sand dabs, a Pacific flatfish similar to sole.

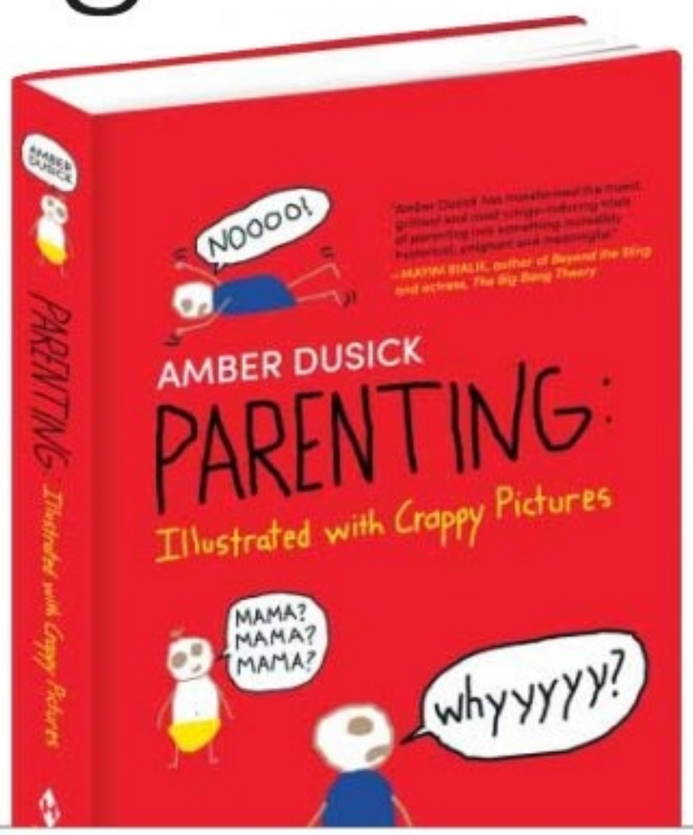
Parenting, via stick figures

Books. Amber Dusick shares some of the rules from her book, "Parenting: Illustrated with Crappy Pictures."



Amber Dusick started her blog, Parenting: Illustrated with Crappy Pictures, because she "needed a place to vent about the funny (and frustrating) things that happened to me as a parent. Turns out, poop is hilarious! At least when you're not the one wiping it up." Dusick is not an artist — not by a long shot — but it is her insights coupled with her amateur drawings that will make any parent chuckle. Her asides are compiled in the new book "Parenting: Illustrated with Crappy Pictures."

The rules

1 The more excited you think they'll be about a gift, the more they will only play with the box.

2 The closing of a bathroom door causes end-of-the-world panic.

3 When you sneak to the pantry to eat chocolate, you will get caught.

4 If you ever tell another parent that you don't have a problem with something, you will begin having that problem tenfold.

City needs to investigate in wake of fire

As I read the Page 1 story on that Allston fire ("Fatal house fire reveals possible overcrowding," April 29), it was sad to hear that one woman was found deceased by firefighters in the home's attic. It was reported 19 folks resided there. City officials are now probing whether allowing 19 people to reside in the three-story home was legal.

Perhaps, it is time for Inspection Services to review things citywide, especially in neighborhoods near college campuses. How many other homes have too many college students in them? Neighborhoods like Allston and Mission Hill need closer attention from City Hall.

SAL GIARRATANI, VIA EMAIL

Stop-and-frisk works

Is stop-and-frisk wrong? Definitely not. Those neighborhoods have higher crime rates than other NYC neighborhoods. Therefore, if police were to just allow the crimes to continue because of political correctness, then that would be racist for allowing minorities to be victimized by other minorities. Look at the stats, stop-and-frisk works.

KEVIN METZ, VIA EMAIL

Ask the mothers

I think the best way to end the controversy regarding stop-and-frisk is to ask the mothers in high crime areas whether they want the practice to continue. They are the parents of both victims and those being stopped by police. The mothers, not politicians or a few angry individuals, should decide what is best for their sons.

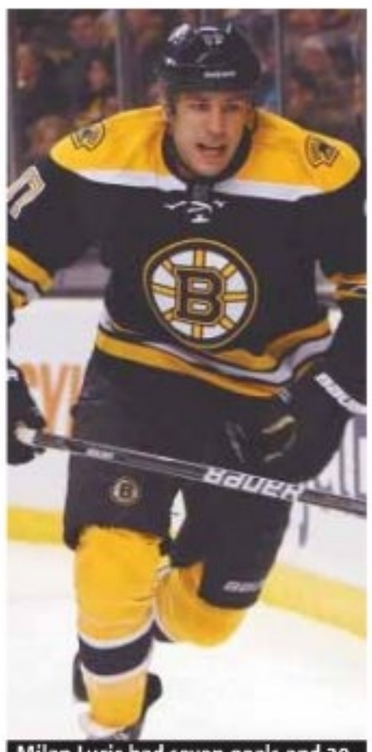
Bruins: 3 players who must step up

NHL playoffs. The slumping B's need improved play from several players, or they'll be a quick out.

As head coach Claude Julien and many of his players emphasized on Sunday night after their regular-season finale, the Bruins are looking forward to starting fresh in the postseason and want to put some of their main issues (notably goal-scoring) behind them. Boston begins its 2013 postseason against Toronto on Wednesday (7 p.m., NESN) in Game 1 at TD Garden. Here are three players that need to step up in order for the B's to legitimately compete for the Cup:



Milan Lucic had seven goals and 20 assists this season. / GETTY IMAGES

• Tuukka Rask
It's easy to forget that Rask hasn't been Boston's starting goaltender in the playoffs since three seasons ago. That ended with the Bruins' historic collapse against the Flyers (up 3-0 in the series, 3-0 in Game 7 at home) in the second round. It's simplistic to say, but the B's will likely go as far as he can take them. A hot goaltender winning big in the NHL playoffs is a recurring theme every spring, and there's hope that Rask could pull a "Thomas in 2011."

• Zdeno Chara
Boston's captain is 36 years old with a million miles on his NHL odometer, but he is still one of the most dominant players, regardless of position, in the league. He struggled a bit down the stretch (understandably looking worn down after an insane schedule) but is expected to pick things up in the playoffs. Julien will likely team Chara with Dennis Seidenberg, creating one of the NHL's best shutdown defensive pairings. It's quite possible that Toronto's Phil Kessel will be seeing Chara in his nightmares after this series.

• Milan Lucic
Lucic was a ghost much of the year but emerged with a goal and two assists in two contests over the weekend. It couldn't come at a better time, with Nathan Horton potentially on the shelf for at least the start of the playoffs. Lucic is one of the few Bruins forwards who can punish opponents physically and on the scoreboard.

JASON COLLINS A BREATH OF FRESH AIR IN BEHIND-THE-TIMES SPORTS WORLD

Opinion

SPORTS@METRO.US

Former Celtics center Jason Collins became the first active professional athlete to announce he is gay in an article he wrote for the May 6 issue of Sports Illustrated. First and foremost, we should thank Collins for kick-starting the public discourse about homosexuality in sports that will ensue in the coming weeks. His decision to come out is brave. Still, I'm worried about exactly how the conversation will unfold.

From the inconsequential (Internet message boards riddled with disgusting commentary), to the irresponsible (pundits with ratings and page views to amass), and, unfortunately, to ignorant peers (fellow athletes, like 49ers cornerback Chris Culliver, who made homophobic remarks about gay athletes prior to the Super Bowl), across the board, reactions will range from humane to reprehensible.

It's ironic, really: As an industry, sports are constantly looking to be progressive from a product standpoint — asking pertinent enterprise-level questions about how to improve the game or consumer experience. While collaborative discussion is typically healthy, I fear that, in this case, the conversation will illuminate how far behind the rest of the world professional sports are.

I wouldn't call Collins' decision to raise his hand "heroic." This is a sports story miscast as something different, a societal milestone where a line of demarcation was traversed. In reality, the more alarming question is why, in 2013, this didn't happen sooner. "Loyalty to my team is the real reason I didn't come out sooner," Collins wrote in his SI article. "When I signed a free-agent contract with Boston last July, I decided to commit myself to the Celtics and not let my personal life become a distraction."

This has callbacks to the controversial pre-draft interviews conducted by NFL teams that were said to have probed rookies about their personal lives, even inquiring around sexuality, stirring a public debate as to whether or not this line of questioning was appropriate. But whether the inquisition was legitimate is irrelevant (for the record, it wasn't). Collins' remarks reflected the same concerns scouts had, meaning that, while unfair, the stigma exists. Perception is the issue here.

Sports is based on results. Anything precluding desired outcomes is a perceived liability. Drug and alcohol abuse. Demanding a trade. Complaining to the media about playing time. Guaranteeing a victory. Calling out opponents. In the sports world, these are distractions. Evidently, according to Collins, so is one's sexuality. And that's disheartening, if not frightening.

Ironically, Collins cited loyalty to a team that later traded him as the reason for not coming out sooner. Loyalty and honesty reveal truth and character. Initially, honesty is what I'm afraid of. But hopefully it fathers progress in an industry that desperately needs it.

Hadfield on Collins' decision

"[Jason Collins'] decision to come out is brave. Still, I'm worried about exactly how the conversation will unfold. ... Reactions will range from humane to reprehensible."
